Quarterly fund commentary

Coronavirus and its economic fallout rocked stock markets globally and Japanese was no exception. Our focus on bottom-up fundamentals remained intact. We took profits from a wholesaler and retailer of mobile equipment and solutions. The fund also reduced exposure to an airline for risk control purpose as the pandemic halted passenger traffic. Using the proceeds, we initiated positions in a manufacturer of clinical reagents, which looks set to benefit from the rising demand for preventive healthcare. We also initiated a position in a provider of a platform and management system for the healthcare industry, which has committed to dividend payments following sharp price corrections. It is premature to say when the coronavirus outbreak will be contained. However, pent-up demand should boost economic activity afterwards, and policy responses have been taken to limit the human and economic impact globally. Therefore, we believe that the Japanese equity market will get back on track, where corporate governance reform progresses, and companies carry on efforts to increase profitability. The fund continues to focus on long-term dividend growth and construct a strategically diversified portfolio consisting of companies with the potential or certainty of increasing dividends.
